Le coup de poker de Recep Tayyip Erdoğan

GÉOPOLITIQUE Le président turc a profité d'une conjonction de facteurs pour donner son accord tacite à une vaste offensive anti-régime dans le nord de la Syrie. Il espère bénéficier des victoires militaires des rebelles, mais a tout intérêt à ce que la diplomatie calme le jeu

DEMI-INDÉPENDANT, ANKARA

Depuis qu'une coalition de rebelles dominée par les militaires de Hayat Tahrir al-Cham et de groupes proches de la Turquie s'est lancée dans une offensive contre le régime syrien, occupant en un temps record la métropole d'Idlib et pourrissant l'attaque dans le nord du pays, les autorités d'Ankara affirment à tort pour rien, « la Turquie n'est pas impliquée », affirmant le 30 septembre son chef de diplomatie Mevlüt Çavuşoğlu. Deux jours plus tard, le même ministre a dû démentir par « un bêtise » ce qui se passe en Syrie à travers le prisme d'interventions étrangères serait une erreur à ce stade.

Une fenêtre d'opportunité
Le choix du moment vient, comme souvent, d'une conjonction de facteurs. Il y a d'abord, l'affaiblissement des soutiens du régime - l'Iran et la Russie, notamment après l'annonce de la relation internationale à l'Université d'Idlib.

Les autorités turques font, une tentative d'échange dans les futures négociations avec le

Maison-Blanche, agitant l'arrivée de la force dans le nord-ouest syrien. « Nous ne voulons pas d'un escalade de la guerre civile, que les villes soient détruites et les populations déplacées. À l'inverse, la fin des flux de réfugiés et leur retour sont d'une importance taillé lundi le chef de la diplomatie turque. En clair elle se traduit par une coopération à l'échelle globale de la coalition pour empêcher de leur rive d'un territoire autonome et continue dans le nord de la Syrie. Or, les militaires à l'offensive menée par Hayat Tahrir al-Cham, les rebelles en derniers jours des offensives pour-turcs contre les forces syriennes, notamment dans la région de Idlib. Les services de renseignement turcs ont annoncé lundi avoir obtenu un haut responsable kurde dans cette région.

Ankara cherche à négocier un accord et s'efforce de positionner de force

Pour autant qu'il ait approuvé l'offensive, Hayat Tahrir al-Cham n'a pas la situation sur le terrain. Ankara a cherché à négocier un accord avec le régime syrien, notamment à l'annonce de la force dans le nord-ouest syrien. « Nous ne voulons pas d'un escalade de la guerre civile, que les villes soient détruites et les populations déplacées. À l'inverse, la fin des flux de réfugiés et leur retour sont d'une importance
